While Lightroom 5 handles collections better than previous versions did, it's still not what we'd like to see. The collection workflow is good enough if you like this way of doing things. We get a good intention, but the collection window is still clumsy when compared to other systems that also support a central collection hierarchy. It makes sense for Lightroom to recreate the functionality of the import window, as the import window wasn't only created for Lightroom. However, it must erase the collection import window that already exists and reinvent it from scratch. I think I got used to it and am perfectly happy with the approach (well, I'd have liked to have seen a little more standardization between image collections and library collections). Unfortunately, I feel that we still don't have enough for the new features in this regard. These should be far more user friendly. A simple import window that has the proper up and down arrows would be perfectly fine. Instead, we have a system that's convoluted and misleading. Personal Note: Photoshop is the best program I have used so far. I feel new users of Photoshop should start with Lightroom 5. I already saved lot of my work in Lightroom 5 and it works fine with all my plugins, etc. Adobe has always insisted on creating the best photo editing software on the planet, a goal that it seems it hasn't lost.
