Thanks for posting your gripes, i recognise this all and how it is actually extremely hard to replicate this on the PC. I use Lightroom and InDesign for my book design and graphic design. Already purchased Marked 2 and working my way through but having serious problems with parallel processing on Windows 10 with a Ryzen Threadripper chip. I am thinking Apple are unrealising the performance potential without a designated graphics card and basically the OS won't be able to process this at all. Not fair to my clients if their photos are send to me and have all the correct settings etc then I come back and a couple of days later the job is done and their photos are horrendous. Im a designer and photographer, so its the wedding photographer who usually has to wait for me so i don't think its fair to blame Adobe Photoshop for this. What It Does: Go to Photoshop's Preview tab in order to choose a photo that matches your project. You can then place those photos in different project layers in order to save time when you have to make changes. You can share with the community through GISTeam, FileNet, and other sites with nearly any vector, style, and raster file type. The good news: two major developments in the past few years finally made this step necessary:

- I want you to be able to easily capture around the clock with an always-on smartphone camera that can artfully capture the moment.
- I want you to be able to do the same in any lighting condition – even ones where it would be hard to use a DSLR.

Our new approach isn't simply a new packaging or deployment model – it's a new way of building our software for both desktop and mobile devices that we think is better for the future. This means bringing true "Photoshop on a phone" capabilities to all devices, not just desktops. And it means letting you do things you've never been able to do with a computer – things like removing the reflection from a pill bottle and adding your favorite sayings to people's portraits. Look for Photoshop Camera to launch in 2019, giving you the same power as Photoshop on a desktop. And it does that in a couple of ways. First, that always-on capture makes your images look more like they're taken with a DSLR; and second, the new mobile engine always uses Photoshop's true mobile capabilities to compress, stream, rescale, and process your images in real time for great results. When it comes to real-time mobile processing, the truth is this is not Photoshop – it's better! On its own merits, Photoshop Camera will be the best Photoshop ever – a productivity tool for professionals in the field. And with it, we're able to bring all of the same tools that professionals use to their phones. e3d0a04c9c
